When the saddlebags were in place, we had no worries about them coming loose or falling off - a spring activated release mechanism has to be pulled on in order to release the bags. One other thing we did, and we do that with every nut and bolt on our Harleys, we used Loctite on the slotted keepers that the bags slide into. If you follow the well-written, one page instructions, you'll find the Ghost Brackets are really EASY to install.

We used these Ghost Brackets throughout the summer, riding in the Canyons and touring through Utah, Nevada and southern Wyoming for various photo shoots. But the real test came when we rode to Sturgis. The instructions told us not to pack more than 15 pounds into each bag, but I know we exceeded that recommendation during the Sturgis run. This is not to say you should carry your spare motor in the saddlebags you've got mounted with Ghost Brackets, but when it becomes necessary, we've found these Ghost Brackets are capable of carrying a bit more than the recommended 15 pound limit. And again, what was really cool was when we reached Sturgis and took off the bags, the bike was clean - no unwanted bracket clutter to detract from the $1,200 billet wheel, matching billet pulley and PM rotor.

It was just exactly the clean look we wanted when the John at Easyriders modified this Dyna. We give these guys a five star rating for a well designed, well made and very effective product.
